James Cameron joins Worthwhile Capital Partners as Senior Adviser

Stockholm, Sweden, Thursday 22 February 2024

Worthwhile Capital Partners – the independent Nordic and Swiss placement agent specialising on sustainable investing – continues to expand its fast-growing business and is thrilled to announce James Cameron as the new Senior Adviser at the firm. An award-winning authority in the global climate change movement with over 30 years of experience as a qualified Barrister, James brings a wealth of knowledge and expertise to our team. He holds influential positions on boards and advisory committees across financial, legal, academic, and governmental organizations. His roles span a diverse range of respected entities, including Howden Group, Ignite, Korn Ferry, Octopus Renewables Infrastructure Trust (ORIT), Orbital Energy, Pollination Group, Verv, and he notably served as Chairman of the Overseas Development Institute from 2012 to 2020.

As the co-founder and, until 2015, Chairman of Climate Change Capital (CCC), James was instrumental in developing the firm into a premier investment bank, boasting 150 employees and managing US$1.6 billion. Prior to CCC, he was a counsel at Baker & McKenzie, pioneering their Climate Change and Clean Energy Practice. James also co-founded both the Foundation for International Environmental Law and Development (FIELD) and the Centre for International Environmental Law (CIEL), underlining his commitment to environmental law and policy.

James's legal career is distinguished by his focus on climate-related issues, including his advisory role in negotiating the UNFCCC and Kyoto Protocol for the Alliance of Small Island States (AOSIS). His contributions as a Friend of COP26 and as an advisor to the Presidencies of the COP20, COP22, COP23, and COP28 climate negotiations have been vital in the advancement of global climate agendas. Furthermore, James holds academic appointments at illustrious institutions including Yale, Oxford, Cambridge, Imperial College London, the Grantham Institute, and the Colorado School of Mines, where his expertise continues to inspire and shape the next generation of leaders and policymakers.

Commenting on his new role, Cameron said: "I'm delighted to have been appointed a senior adviser to Worthwhile Capital Partners. We have a huge challenge to find, aggregate, manage and direct capital so that it flows into reducing climate, energy and security risk; and creates real wealth. It has to flow in the right amount to the right places at the right speed and in hands of people we trust to deliver a worthwhile outcome. That takes knowledge, skill and perseverance, which Christian and his team have in good measure.”

Worthwhile Capital Partners is at the forefront of shaping the future of investment by meticulously selecting, analysing and promoting direct investments and specialist fund managers to institutional investors who want to be at the forefront of sustainable investing. The firm’s approach is tailored to empower institutional investors in achieving their financial and sustainability objectives for the years ahead, without sacrificing returns. In just a few short years, Worthwhile Capital Partners quickly secured approximately US$1.6 billion in investor commitments, a testament to its focused and rapidly expanding business model. This success was underscored in 2023 when Private Equity International ranked the firm’s fundraising team 10th globally in the infrastructure funds category. The firm’s efforts have not only yielded a remarkable 60% annual growth in fundraising but have also made a significant environmental impact, helping to prevent over 62 million tonnes of CO₂ emissions. Worthwhile Capital Partners is dedicated to driving change and delivering value, proving that strategic investment can go hand in hand with environmental stewardship. It prides itself on its selective focus, working closely with only a limited number of fund managers and leveraging its decades long investor relationships to forge deep connections.

“We are immensely thrilled to welcome James Cameron to Worthwhile Capital Partners as our new Senior Adviser.”, said Christian Andersson, the firm’s Managing Partner. “James’s unparalleled expertise in climate advocacy and his distinguished career spanning over three decades make him an invaluable addition to our team as we embark on promoting investment strategies that decarbonize our economies, protect nature and restore biodiversity. His appointment marks a significant milestone in our journey, and I am confident that his guidance will further elevate our efforts to merge strategic investment with environmental stewardship. James will work closely with our partner Niclas Sundström to identify, analyse and promote investment opportunities for our growing pool of institutional investors that aspire to be leaders in sustainable investing in the years ahead. Sustainable investing transcends merely stepping back from underperforming companies or leveraging governance through voting rights; it’s fundamentally about channeling capital into sectors and regions that critically require support for sustainable growth. This is the essence of our mission at Worthwhile Capital Partners—facilitating the flow of investment where it can make the most difference, driving positive change, and fostering a sustainable future for all.”
